Is First Full-Time Rabbi Certified As Psychologist

The Rev. Dr. Henry Enoch Kagan, of Sinai Temple in Mount Vernon, N. Y., is considered to be the first full-time "preaching rabbi" to be certified as a consulting psychologist who is licensed to practice psychotherapy. Just a few weeks ago Rabbi Kagan received his license from the State Board of Examiners for Psychologists.

For more than ten years Dr. Kagan took post-graduate work in psychology at Columbia University. At the same time he ministered to his suburban congregation of 1,800 in Westchester County.

In a recent interview Dr. Kagan told the New York Times that he had deliberately chosen to be both a practicing rabbi and a psychologist. As long as twenty years ago, he noted, he was convinced that a psychologically trained clergyman could function far more effectively than one without such training.

Dr. Kagan pointed out that only in the last century had the role of a minister been primarily that of preacher and administrator. Until then, he observed, the clergyman's role was largely advisory and consultative. The religious counselors to whom the Biblical Jew came in private to talk out his personal problems for outnumbered the publicly acclaimed priests and prophets who preached their way to fame, the rabbi said.

"The wise men of the Bible," he continued, "applied a healing method for sick souls that was intuitively similar to the techniques of modern psychotherapy. They even anticipated modern psychosomatic medicine by their knowledge of how emotional worries produced bodily ailments and by their understanding that through the talking out of these

Calls Anti-Semitism Hard To Combat Because It Is Furtive

The Anti-Defamation League of Bnai Brith said that anti-Semitism in America was still "basically and most accurately reflected" in housing, employment, education and social attitudes, despite incidents like the bombings of temples, says the New York Times. The report, issued by Henry Edward Schultz, national chairman of the agency, was presented at the League's four-day annual meeting at the Savoy Hilton Hotel in New York.

Since its establishment, the League has combated bigotry and discrimination and promoted intergroup relations. Reporting to the agency's national commission, Mr. Schultz said, "Despite recent temple bombings in the South, which have gained international attention, the core of the problem is still the attitudes and the ignorance of vast numbers of people who tolerate or condone religious discrimination in our midst."

In a message to Mr. Schultz, President Eisenhower lauded the "organs of responsible journalism which have contributed to our heritage of freedom and equality. Would that it were equally possible," the President wrote, "to congratulate each of the countless citizens in communities across the land who daily serve America's democratic ideals with quiet courage and devotion. Congratulations to the recipients of your awards, and best wishes for the continuing success of your work."

Recently, the Anti-Defamation League named as recipients of its America's Democratic Legacy Awards: The New York Times, Look Magazine, and the Columbia Broadcasting System. The awards are given annually for service to the nation that "en-

Influx Of Poor To Israel Brings Major Health Problems

The director-general of the Hadassah medical organization in Israel stressed at Miami Beach, Florida, that the influx of immigrants to Israel had posed major problems of public health. Dr. Kalman J. Mann, head of the organization, declared that Israel must still solve varied public health difficulties if it was to "integrate successfully tens of thousands of new immigrants," particularly those who arrived from Oriental countries.

The Hadassah medical organization, the major project of Hadassah, the women's Zionist organization of America, supports and directs a network of hospital, and clinical and research institutions in Israel, says the New York Times. Reporting to 2,000 delegates attending the forty-fourth annual convention of Hadassah at the Fontainebleau Hotel, Dr. Mann said that Israel's public health problems were rooted in these underlying causes:

"Israel is still an undeveloped, semi-tropical country, and, as such, has problems indigenous to such a land." Israel had trebled her population in the last ten years, resulting in public health problems both "for the migrating group as well as for the receiving nation." These public health problems were "aggravated by the fact that the immigrants, embracing the remnants of European Jewry and Jews from Middle Eastern countries, came to Israel in poor economic and physical condition."

Israel's population today is more than 2,000,000. Listing the various diseases of those who entered Israel in the last ten years, Dr. Mann noted that "Israel had been virtually free of these diseases before the mass immigration to the Jewish state."

J.D.C. OVERSEAS AID AUTHORITY SAYS WORLD REFUGEE PROBLEM DEMANDS GOVERNMENTAL HELP ON LARGE SCALE

Herbert Agar, Pulitzer Prize-winning historian, said that the creation of Israel has helped to change the role of the Jew in world affairs. "No longer is the Jew the door-mat of history, resigned to his fate. Today he can not only defend his rights and freedom, but he is able to contribute constructively to solutions of the world's ills."

Mr. Agar, who was in Poland a month ago, said that "Poland is the most terrifying place I have seen in recent years. It is terrifying not because it is an Iron Curtain country but because you can hardly put a spade into the ground without turning up the bones of those who died because of the Nazis. Poland is today a shallow graveyard. And Auschwitz, the concentration camp which is usually associated with the killing of Jews, but where thousands of men of all countries died, is today a United Nations of the dead."

Mr. Agar spoke at a dinner held in New York at the 44th annual meeting of the Joint Distribution Committee, major American agency aiding distressed Jews overseas. Edward M. M. Warburg, JDC chairman, presided.

Moses A. Leavitt, JDC executive vice-chairman, told the audience that "we are faced today with a picture of expanding Jewish needs overseas, of larger numbers of men, women, and children in critical need of assistance. Despite the great volume of aid which American Jewry has provided since the war to needy Jews abroad, the fact is," he said, "that in the past year we have been unable to keep pace with the increased need of Jews in France, sections of Eastern Europe, and a large part of the Moslem world."

Mr. Leavitt listed JDC's major responsibilities in 1959 as: aid to thousands of Jews in Poland, including repatriates from Russia and members of the so-called "settled" population; assistance to Hungarian, Egyptian, and North African Jewish refugees in France, Italy, and other parts of Western Europe; medical, feeding, and other supplementary assistance to some 100,000 Jews in Moslem areas, principally North Africa; and continued large-scale aid to aged, ill, and handicapped newcomers to Israel.

Mr. Leavitt said that the JDC must aid a minimum of 250,000 Jewish men, women, and children overseas during the coming year. A recognized authority on overseas aid, he returned from a four-month survey of refugee problems in India, Pakistan, Southeast Asia, Australia, Iran, Israel, and Europe.

"The world refugee problem," the JDC leader said, "will never be solved without governmental and inter-governmental aid. When you watch the private voluntary agencies trying to nibble away at the problems of millions of Chinese, Hindu, and Moslem refugees in the incredibly overcrowded and poverty-stricken areas of Hong Kong, India and Pakistan, you realize how helpless they are, ingenious and devoted as they may be.

"I have seen a lot of poverty in some thirty-five years of social work," Mr. Leavitt continued, "but I have never seen the unrelieved misery, the utter destitution, and the hopelessness that I saw on this trip. Governments will have to stop bargaining with each other. They will have to undertake once and for all a coordinated large-scale effort," he emphasized. Mr. Leavitt last year completed a four-year term as chairman of the American Council of Voluntary Agencies for Foreign Service and now serves as the Council's honorary chairman.

At a business session some 500 delegates from all parts of America adopted a budget of $29,593,000 for aid for more than 250,000 men, women, and children in twenty-five countries including Israel. The 1959 budget represents an increase of more than $1,600,000 over expenditures in 1958. The largest single appropriation, totalling $11,000,000, will go for support of Malben, the JDC welfare program in Israel serving aged, ill, and handicapped newcomers to Israel. In addition, the delegates unanimously passed a resolution pledging full support for the 1959 campaigns of the United Jewish Appeal.

The budget was adopted following a report by Charles H. Jordan, director-general for JDC overseas operations, who pointed out that "increased Jewish relief needs in Poland and Moslem areas, and expanded aid programs in France in behalf of unabsorbed Jewish refugees there from Hungary, Egypt, and North Africa, largely account for the increase in the budget." But the increased budget, Mr. Jordan warned, "covers only continuing assistance programs. It contains no reserve with which to meet new or unexpected developments, or the possible effect on JDC operations, particularly in Israel, of the recently begun Jewish emigration from certain parts of Eastern Europe. Should this emigration assume the very important dimensions that many observers expect, JDC may require greatly increased funds," he emphasized.

The delegates re-elected Edward M. M. Warburg JDC chairman for the 14th successive year; others re-elected: Mr. Leavitt, executive vice-chairman; Mr. Jordan, director-general; James H. Becker, of Chicago, Ill., chairman of the JDC National Council; and Sol. Satinsky, of Philadelphia, Pa., Council vice-chairman.

Mr. Warburg told the delegates that "the hopes and dreams and prayers and visions of scores of thousands scattered all over the globe rest with the men and women assembled here. "We are meeting," the JDC chairman said, "not merely to adopt a budget but to adopt as our very own the hopes of a little boy in Morocco and the dreams of a little girl in Poland, and the vision of a bearded patriarch who has seen many lands in his lifetime and now has come to Israel. "Thanks to what we do here," Mr. Warburg said, "a family of refugees will find in France the refuge they have been seeking and an end to an odyssey of pain, and in Israel a man of eighty will kiss the soil, and breathe the clean air and know that the weary wandering years are done and that here at last will be have peace and a home."

Herbert Agar, who won the Pulitzer Prize for history in 1934 with his work on American presidents called "The People's Choice," told his audience that during a brief visit to Poland in November he happened to attend the trial of Erich Koch, the former Nazi Gauleiter for East Prussia and the Bialystok region. The trial has been going on in Warsaw since October 20. Koch is charged with the murder of tens of thousands of Poles.

"There is no doubt in my mind," Mr. Agar declared, "that within a very few days after the trial had started, the Polish authorities had presented enough evidence to condemn and convict Koch. They are continuing the trial, however, in order to get everything possible onto the trial record. They are doing this because they are convinced that within a very brief time the Germans will be saying that these atrocities never happened, that the Jews and others are simply suffering from neuroses."

He told his audience that he had also been to Israel recently and lauded the Jewish state for its hospitality to hundreds of thousands of Jewish former DPs. "If the United States had taken more of these unfortunate human beings in 1946 and 1947, as it did in earlier days, this act would have been to America's glory as well as to its enrichment. America should have been the example for all mankind, particularly since immigrants helped to make us the greatest country in the world. When we failed to open our doors, when the DP's found that all havens were closed to them, Israel became a historic necessity."

Mr. Agar told the Joint Distribution Committee audience that in every part of Europe, "wherever the name of JDC, the Joint, is known, it is spoken with love and affection. In many areas, the mere presence of a representative makes the Jews of the country feel that they have a future. My own feeling, after having seen the JDC in action, after having seen the combination of experience, good will and intelligence which it brings to bear in its programs, is that, it would perhaps be a far better world if it were given the job of running it."

In a report on 1958 activities Mr. Leavitt noted that "JDC assistance programs in 1958 benefited more than 196,000 men, women, and children, including 100,000 persons in Moslem areas, principally North Africa and Iran; 56,000 in Europe; more than 35,000 in Israel; and more than 5,000 in Australia and South America." An outstanding development of aid in 1958 was in behalf of needy Polish Jews which, Mr. Leavitt pointed out, was resumed in December, 1957, after a lapse of eight years, at the invitation of the Polish government. By the year's end JDC had helped 22,000 Polish Jews, more beneficiaries than in any other country in Europe.

Assistance programs during the first six months of the year, Mr. Leavitt reported, included: cash relief for 25,490; feeding aid for 82,515; medical aid for 33,585; care in homes for the aged for 5,725; aid to 5,025 children and young people; educational assistance to 68,435; and other cultural assistance to 35,275. More than 16,000 aged, ill, and handicapped newcomers and their families in Israel received the aid of Malben, the JDC welfare program in the Jewish state.

A notable event of the year, Mr. Leavitt said, was the opening of the Paul Baerwald School of Social Work in Jerusalem and Tel Aviv. Israel's first university level social work school, it was established by JDC, the Hebrew University, and the Israel Ministry of Social Welfare with the aim of training a corps of men and women equipped to handle Israel's pressing social problems. It was named in honor of the former chairman, now an honorary chairman, of JDC. Under the direction of Dr. Eileen Blackey, a distinguished American educator, the School offers a three-year course leading to a Bachelor of Social Work degree. Sixty-eight students, including three Israeli Arabs, were enrolled in the first class.

Mr. Leavitt also cited among major developments on the JDC scene during the first six months of 1958 the granting of more than $1,800,000 in loans by JDC-supported loan institutions; the distribution of 3,000,000 pounds of U.S. Department of Agriculture food supplies in eleven countries; and the provision of vocational

Jias House, Temporary Montreal Shelter For Immigrant Families

Since mid-December, 1957, the phrase "the Jias House" has become a familiar term to the Social Service Department of the Jewish Immigrant Aid Services of Canada, Montreal. The reference is to the house, located on St. Luke Street in the downtown section of the city, which Jias uses as a temporary shelter for immigrant families from North Africa. Thus, the need for the existence of such a shelter is connected to the immigration of Jewish settlers from North Africa which began in November, 1956.

When the immigration from North Africa, which had been prompted by the unsettled and troubled political conditions existing in that area, started, the arrivals consisted of single individuals or families with one or two children. Gradually the tempo of immigration from the area increased. In addition, the composition of the family groups also underwent a change, as families with anywhere from three to seven children, or sometimes more, began to appear on the scene.

The expanded family groups presented a problem of accommodation, as the usual method of placing new arrivals in furnished rooms until more permanent living quarters could be arranged could not be applied in these instances. Landlords proved to be extremely reluctant in accepting families of this size, and permanent accommodation had to wait upon the completion of other facets of settlement such as employment etc . . . . Moreover the cost of placing the families in furnished rooms, which were only obtained with much difficulty, began to prove prohibitive.

A more satisfactory solution, socially for the immigrants and economically for the agency, had to be found. Therefore, when the house on St. Luke Street, was offered to the agency, the sought-for solution appeared to be on hand. The time that has elapsed since the house's acquisition, the latter part of 1957 has proven that the difficulties that existed previously, on both counts, have become greatly minimized, and no longer possess the same dimensions. From the moment that the first families were placed in the house, it has been referred to as "the Jias House" by the staff responsible for its supervision.

Since the arrangement was made, twenty families, have made use of its facilities. As soon as the wage-earners of a family have secured employment, and as soon as the family has selected permanent accommodation of their choice, then the move is made. To date, the average length of time during which a family remains in the Jias House is two months. However, for a certain few families, the length of time has been extended due to particular circumstances attached to the families' situations.

The house contains ten rooms, and each room contains facilities for a limited amount of individual cooking. The families do the bulk of their cooking in the main kitchen, which is used in communal fashion. The kitchen contains two gas stoves, a refrigerator, and a washing machine. The families are responsible for the cleaning and maintenance of their individual living quarters, and for the house in general.

Aside from meeting the immediate housing needs of the immigrants, the house serves several other purposes. For one, a number of the families were acquainted with each other in their country of origin, and therefore a certain stability and security results from the renewal of the relationships. Secondly, the house possesses a more intimate and freer atmosphere, even with the presence of a number of other families, than does a furnished room. This latter aspect has reduced the intensity of the feeling of strangeness which confronts many an immigrant immediately after their arrival in a new country.

The Jias House is a further indication of the flexibility which Jias constantly uses in its approach towards the integration and adjustment of the newcomer. Jias realizes that, many times, a social service agency must adapt itself to a particular situation in order to overcome a difficulty. As in the past, Jias still adheres to the principle that changing times require a change in method and approach.

The incoming chairman is Julius Briskin. Citing the great progress made by Israel as "a real democracy" in population, development and economic achievement, Mr. Justice Douglas pointed out that the country was "still having problems with its neighbors. Israel faces the coincident but competitive dangers of Communism and Pan-Arabism, and fear of what may be brought about by the Arab feudal overlords. There is a serious danger in Iraq because of the influence of the Communists, to whom Iraq has turned for protection against Nasser". The problems arising out of Pan-Arabism and Russian interest in the Persian Gulf and Middle East oil put the whole region "in a state of turmoil, and great danger," Mr. Justice Douglas said. Countering such disturbing factors in the Middle East and Asia he asserted, were Israel, Turkey and India — "really vital democracies which are towers of strength." He ranked Israel as having achieved "the most advanced technological development" in the Middle East.

Because of this, he announced that Hadassah was focusing its regional community health services program upon public health problems. He said it would cooperate with the Hebrew University — Hadassah Medical School in Jerusalem in training undergraduates in the essentials of social medicine and public health as well as in postgraduate training of workers in these fields.

At another session, Moshe Kol, world director of Youth Aliyah, declared that his organization was ready to accept children, ranging in age from 13 to 16, from Morocco and the Soviet Union as well as from other countries if they could obtain permission from their governments to emigrate to Israel.

Youth Aliyah is an international agency devoted to the rescue and relief of underprivileged Jewish children and their rehabilitation in Israel, says the New York Times. Hadassah is the official representative of the agency in America.

training to more than 15,000 persons through ORT schools. JDC's traditional Passover distributed in eleven European countries over 300,000 pounds of matzoth, matzoh meal, and fats. Thousands of youngsters were provided with summer vacations, another of JDC's special projects.

Mr. Leavitt also noted the continuation of JDC's efforts to establish Jewish centers throughout Europe as a step towards the revitalization of Jewish communal life on the continent. Since 1954 in twelve European countries, Mr. Leavitt reported, funds provided by JDC and the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany have helped to establish 60 community adult and youth centers, costing a total of $3,400,000. Mr. Leavitt hailed the progress toward self-sufficiency of local Jewish communities in Europe, pointing out that they had raised $1,400,000 toward construction of the centers.

Mr. Warburg paid particular tribute to the field workers who serve JDC's far-flung programs: "They have seen the faces of fear and the sounds of weeping. They have heard the guns grow silent, only to hear the cries of the wounded continue more loudly in the stillness. They have seen the oppressor pass away, but have seen the broken bodies of his victims left as a bequest to the world, not dead, but not living. They have seen the walls of Dachau torn down and destroyed, but years after, in far-off places, they have found and met, and spoken with, the little bits and pieces of Dachau which still survive. Suffering they have seen and sorrow beyond easing, and despair. But also joy. And happiness, and fulfillment. The joy of a child with a pair of new shoes, and a meal to ease her hunger. The happiness of a mother who knows finally that her son will live, because the life-saving drugs have come. The fulfillment of men and women as they look about them amazed at the land which is to be their home, as the fear drops from them, as their shoulders grow straight and they laugh for the first time the joyous laugh of free men. All these joys have they seen, the men and women who serve us, who serve JDC and the American Jewish community. All these joys have they seen; and that is their reward. As it is ours. For if we give joy, we also share it."

James H. Becker, chairman of the JDC National Council, said that members of the National Council, leaders of Jewish communities from coast to coast, are largely responsible for the continued and warm acceptance by American Jewry of the programs which are placed before them. A resolution of support for the nationwide campaigns of the United Jewish Appeal noted that "the failure of American Jewry during 1958 to provide the full amounts necessary to the United Jewish Appeal for the life-saving programs of the JDC and other UJA agencies resulted in hardships and suffering which might have been avoided if only UJA campaign goals had been fully met."

riches its heritage of democratic freedom."

In his annual report, Mr. Schultz said that discrimination against Jews "is persistent, tenacious and most difficult to combat because it is usually practiced so furtively. In the South," he said, "the crisis over school integration has produced a classic situation for anti-Semitic exploitation." He added, "Extreme segregationists have become a prime market for the propaganda and hate materials for long-time professional anti-Semites."

In another report, says the New York Times, Judge David A. Rose, of Boston, chairman of the League's civil rights committee, said, "anti-Jewish discrimination in housing — along with the general population trend — is moving to the suburbs and small towns of America."

"Dr Zhivago": A Jewish Dissent Against Attack

BY JACOB GLATSTEIN, DISTINGUISHED YIDDISH POET, ESSAYIST, AND CRITIC

In his column in the New York Times Book Review, J. Donald Adams has added his voice to the growing swell of critical hosannas being accorded Boris Pasternak and his sensational "Dr. Zhivago." Mr. Adams, in the course of his raptures, pauses to discuss the author himself. "Although born a Jew," he tells us, "Pasternak, in "Dr. Zhivago," proclaims his present adherence to a Christian faith; by nature a seeker after truth and a strong believer in the value of the human individual, he has lived through a time when that belief has been trampled upon."

Is this not a remarkable sequence of ideas? We are told about Pasternak's Jewish origins and his acceptance of Christianity; and all this is linked with his passionate zeal for truth and individuality. Mr. Adams may, of course, simply have condensed into one sentence a number of facts, but he has left the unmistakable inference that when a Jew is an inveterate seeker after truth, his odyssey must inevitably lead him to accept Christianity.

There is, to be sure, not a single line in the entire book from which one can derive directly the knowledge that Boris Pasternak, son of the famous Jewish artist who painted Bialik and Weizmann, Leonid Pasternak, has actually submitted to conversion or that he urges other Jews to follow suit. But, like any other intelligent reader who knows the ways novelists have of presenting personal opinion lightly disguised as speeches of their principal characters, Mr. Adams has arrived at a proper surmise. It is not Pasternak's Jewish hero in "Dr. Zhivago", Misha Gordon, who proclaims his rejection of Judaism and his passionate acceptance of Christianity, but Pasternak himself, using Gordon as his mouthpiece.

How is one to explain the gratuitous and embittered attacks on Jews and Judaism that disfigure the novel? The passages that deal with Jews are grafted onto the body of the text and, if anything, impede the novel's grand sweep. Surely, there must be an explanation for these extraneous, obtrusive passages. It is easy to dismiss them as merely incidental to the author's grand design, but they plainly reveal a missionary zeal and anti-Jewish bias that cannot be lightly disregarded.

I realize that many intellectual Jews will find such talk about Pasternak hard to swallow. This is not the first instance where such intellectuals have apologized in elegant dialectics for the derelictions of a converted Jew who has made his mark as an artist or has been stamped as a great moral force. Such apologetics are never in order for a crasser level of meshumadim, but are imperative for those whose artistic, intellectual success in the world seems to demand an entirely different standard of judgment, a tolerance that does not stretch to the ordinary mortal. As for this writer, a blatant piece of anti-Jewish writing remains so whether trumpeted by the ignorant or adeptly interwoven into a work of art.

Indeed, the latter antagonist who reviles the Jewish people, declares war on its faith, denies it the right to national existence and survival, is the more dangerous precisely because of his reputation and renown. Certainly it is obligatory on the Jew who resents such assaults to strike back even if in doing so he breaks a few of the tolerance commandments that are enjoined on the victim and never on the aggressor. To fail to take note of the anti-Jewish venom which streaks the pages of "Dr. Zhivago", specifically certain speeches of Gordon and Lara, Zhivago's mistress, and to fail to reprove its author is a plain failure of moral responsibility on the part of Jews.

Let us examine some of the key themes and specific observations in "Dr. Zhivago" which bear on Pasternak's attitudes toward the Jews. Early in the book, the dominant Christian motifs are introduced. Uncle Kolya, Zhivago's uncle and also a writer, lectures a visitor on the unique values of Christianity. Jesus, the learned uncle says, ushered in a new dimension of historical consciousness. He diverted the attention which was concentrated on the group, the nation, the people, and turned it to the precious individual soul, to "the idea of the free personality and the idea of life as sacrifice." For the first time he rescued man from the rest of nature and inaugurated a society that was truly human. The teachings of Judaism about the sanctity of the individual, which long antedate the coming of Jesus, are wholly ignored.

The tolerant Jewish intellectual may, of course, assert that Pasternak has a right to his passionate Christian convictions, to exposit them, and indeed urge his readers to embrace the Christian faith. Some of the intellectuals have ventured the opinion that Pasternak is in direct descent from Tolstoy, whose spiritual and artistic disciple the author of "Dr. Zhivago" is made out to be. Perhaps, were it not for the fact that Pasternak finds it necessary to employ his own Christianity as a springboard from which to launch a vicious assault on Jewish continuity and identity.

There is the famous passage in the book showing a Cossack mocking an old Jew, humiliating him and beating him. Yuri Andreyevich Zhivago, the Christian who witnesses the brutal scene in the company of his Jewish friend, Gordon, vehemently denounces the pogroms and Jewish persecutions. Pasternak, not usually sparing of his words, concludes the long account with unaccustomed brevity: "Gordon did not answer." But why didn't he? Zhivago, the Christian, boils over in righteous anger at the wanton cruelty of pogroms. Why does the Jew keep silent?

The answer is soon forthcoming. Gordon, it turns out in a conversation on the following day, holds an altogether different view on the matter. He maintains that the Jewish people itself is responsible for pogroms. And Gordon, no longer terse, proceeds to deliver himself of his, and the author's, opinions about Jewish life. In the course of this outburst, he clearly indicates that his opinions derive from an exposure to Uncle Kolya's Christian teachings.

Thus, the anti-Jewish tirade is made to rest directly on the classic Christian proposition: the Jews' suffering is retribution for their rejection of Christ as Savior. The Cossack, argues Gordon, is not altogether to blame for his action. If the Jews would only rid themselves of their incorrigible martyr-complex, surrender their Jewish distinctiveness, cease living as Jews, the Cossack would, ipso facto, no longer find it necessary to give them an occasional boot in the seat!

This "solution" to the Jewish problem, vulgar as it is cynical, is expressed in the most blatant, primitive missionary manner, tied as it is to the Jews' unforgivable historic crime, their rejection of Jesus and "the new force which had come out of their own midst." Read, if you will, the following effusion on Jewish life and determine whether Pasternak's attitude can be interpreted as vague and innocent assimilationism:

"Their (the Jews) national idea has forced them, century after century to be a people and nothing but a people, and the extraordinary thing is that they have been chained to this deadening task all through the centuries when the rest of the world was being delivered from it by a new force which had come out of their own midst! How can you account for it? Just think! This glorious holiday from mediocrity, from the dreary, boring constriction of everyday life, was first achieved on their soil, proclaimed in their language, belonged to their race! And they actually saw and heard it and let it go! How could they do it? In whose interests is this voluntary martyrdom? Who stands to gain by keeping it so that innocent old men and women and children, all these clever, kind, humane people should go on being mocked and beaten up throughout the centuries? Why don't the intellectual leaders of the Jewish people dismiss this army which is forever fighting and being massacred nobody knows for what? Why don't they say to them: That's enough, stop now. Don't hold on to your identity, don't all get together in a crowd. Disperse. Be with all the rest. You are the first and best Christians in the world . . .

Let us turn to some further lucubrations of Pasternak on the Jews. This time the words are put into the mouth of Lara and we have from her a capsule study of Jewish history which is a Slavic version of Toynbee's fossil thesis:

"It's so strange that these people (the Jews) who once liberated mankind from the yoke of idolatry, and so many of them who now devoted themselves to liberation from injustice, should be incapable of liberating themselves from their loyalty to an obsolete, antediluvian identity that has lost all meaning, that they should not rise above themselves and dissolve among all the rest whose religion they have founded and who would be so close to them, if they knew them better.

"Of course it's true that persecution forces them into this futile and disastrous attitude, this shame-faced, self-denying isolation that brings them nothing but misfortune. But I think some of it also comes from a kind of inner senility, a historical centuries-long weariness. I don't like their whistling in the dark, their prosaic, limited outlook, the timidity of their imagination. It's as irritating as old men talking of old age or sick people about sickness."

It is significant that when Toynbee expressed his views of Jewish history, Jewish intellectuals indignantly condemned them; yet we are asked to overlook Pasternak's views as casual and glancing. Would we have been asked to do so if the book had not been made a weapon in the Cold War, a propaganda instrument for attacking the Soviet tyranny?

Let us be frank and recognize "Dr. Zhivago" for what it is intended to convey to Jews: a gross attack on our faith; an unsubtle invitation to surrender our identity and accede to the wooing of the Church. The Jewish people, Pasternak says in effect, no longer has any reason for maintaining its separate existence: "There are no nations but only persons."

In the United Nations there are at present represented 82 sovereign nations, a good many of which may be styled Christian. These, however, seem to present no threat to Pasternak's theology; apparently they are not even to be considered "nations" (invidious term) but blessed aggregates of Christian "persons." The Jewish nation alone is singled out for special advice to commit national suicide.

Pasternak's conversion, it would appear, was in the nature of a major lobotomy, self-performed on his Jewish brain and destroying all sense of proportion. While he urges all men to pursue freedom and self-realization he would deny the Jewish people these sacred rights. We are all asked to respect and love Pasternak for his sacrifices, for his willingness to endure obloquy and suffering for his beliefs. Yet, ironically, the Jewish people's age-old martyrdom for its beliefs only arouses Pasternak's scorn. While Pasternak regards Russian soil as holy and pleads not to be exiled from it, he ignores the Jewish people's attachment to a land made sacred in its hopes and prayers since the first exile "by the waters of Babylon."

One final observation remains to be made. People have praised Pasternak's courage for embracing the Greek Orthodox Church during the reign of Stalin, when anti-religious propaganda was at its height. But did this require the same amount of courage as remaining openly and firmly Jewish? Imagine what would have happened had David Bergelson or Itzik Feffer suddenly become worshippers in the Moscow synagogue or students in the Moscow yeshiva to indicate their resistance to the regime! They would have been liquidated long before 1958. The distinct possibility is that if they had sought the sanctuary of the Greek Orthodox Church they would very likely be alive today.

But this is to enter a realm of speculation, and in the instance of "Dr. Zhivago" and Boris Pasternak it is better to stick to the facts. These facts are damning. They constitute, in sum, an indictment of Pasternak for his utter lack of understanding of Jewish history and aspiration and a disregard of "the truth" which he is so passionately seeking. They betray an absence of that breadth of spirit and insight which always distinguishes the universal artist.

troubling tensions a person could find relief and be restored to health."

Dr. Kagan emphasized that this approach was not comparable to the confessional nor to faith healing, says the New York Times. It was a relationship, he said, between an individual and a religious personality who acted as a counselor in permitting the individual to "talk out his tensions."

Dr. Kagan praised Sigmund Freud as one proud of his Jewish heritage even though he claimed to be nonreligious. "Despite agnosticism," he said, "Freud did make the greatest contribution to religious thinking in the twentieth century by his insistence that people act through unconscious motives of which they are unaware.

"Therefore, if people are to behave according to the high morals and ethics religion requires of them, they must first become aware of those hidden guilts and fears that block and prevent them from such noble behavior."

Dr. Kagan is the founder of the Committee on Psychiatry and Religion of the Central Conference of American Rabbis. He is also a member of the Committee on Relations Between Religion and Psychology of the American Psychological Association.

In 1956 he supervised a session on group dynamics at a summer institute on pastoral psychology at St. John's Abbey in Minnesota. The institute was conducted by the Roman Catholic order of St. Benedict.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada, printed in any language reaching the Jewish community, that is able to claim membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations.
